From the Senior Warden...

Dear people and friends of St. John's,

Your Vestry approved the Vestry Charge to the Search Committee on October 14, 2018. The text of that document is appended to my report to you.

On November 11, the Vestry appointed a 12-member Search Committee. The names of the Search Committee members were published in the December issue of The Evangel.

On November 25, the Search Committee was commissioned by the Rev. Sr. Diane Stier in a special ceremony on Christ the King Sunday.

On December 16, the Senior and Junior Wardens met with the Search Committee to review the Vestry Charge to the Search Committee. After the review, the Committee met in closed session and elected the following officers:

Marian Matyn, Chair

Lara Raisanen, Co-Chair

Jessica Hart, Chaplain

Adam Baker, Clerk ex officio

On January 13, 2019, the Rev. Canon Missioner Anne Hallmark (Northern Region) will meet for the first time with the Search Committee and the Vestry to begin the formal search process.

In your daily prayers during the search process, I bid you pray for the work of the Search Committee:

Almighty God, giver of every good gift: Look graciously on your Church, and so guide the minds of those who shall choose a rector for this parish, that we may receive a faithful pastor, who will care for your people and equip us for our ministries; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen. (Book of Common Prayer, p. 818)

A blessed and holy Christmas season to each and everyone of you!

Your servant,

David

Outside the Tent

As I write this column, Christmas is eight days away. We've festooned the windows with greens, and the tree—our usual Fraser fir—is thick with ornaments and lights. This week we will wrap gifts and open the boxes of gifts our children have mailed from their far-flung homes. I'm thinking about my "children's" homily for Christmas Eve, probably a telling of the Christmas story using Father Jean Brebeuf's seventeenth-century "Huron Carol," an adaptation of the narrative of Luke for his flock of Huron Indians.

Christmas is such a rich time domestically and liturgically that January would be a letdown were it not for Epiphany, with its references to shining stars, glittering gold coins, and the rich scents of incense and myrrh. Five years ago Moonyeen Albrecht and I wrote an Epiphany carol to mark that feast. We always work the same way: I write the lyrics, then she writes the music. The choir performed our offering, and I offer to you the text: may it lead you into a richer celebration of the birth of Jesus.

Creator of the Stars of Night: an Epiphany Carol

Creator of the stars of night,
we thank you for your guiding light,
bright herald of the holy birth,
of beam of hope for this dark earth.

Three wise men saw the rising star,
that wondrous beacon from afar;
through trackless wilderness they trod
to see the king, the son of God.

Wise men and women still today
tell how the infant Jesus lay
in humble state, but radiant,
the kingly child our maker sent.

We cannot give him myrrh and gold
as men of Asis did of old;
so we give thanks for love and light,
his blessing on this star-filled night.

Peace to you in this holy season, Nancy

Sr. John's Episcopal Church
Vestry Meeting – December 9, 2018

Present are Adam Baker (clerk), Clancy DeLong, Marcia David, Harriett White, Nancy Herman-Kinney, Diane Stier, David Shirley, Ulana Klymyshyn, Ella Jo Regan, Tom Cochrane.

Ulana opens with prayers for Vestry and the Search Committee.

Nancy mentions a correction to the minutes for November. The minutes should read that x amount has been donated for the paint cost of the parish house. Ella moves we approve minutes with Nancy's correction. Nancy seconds, Vestry approves.

Diane reports on her attempts to organize the New Year's vigil and an Association of Interfaith Ministries group.

David reports that the Bishop's office will be moved to Wyoming, Michigan on or before Jan 1, 2019.

Nancy reports that we have hired Will Spencer for snow removal.

David reports that next Sunday at 11:45 the two Wardens and the Search Committee will meet to review the Charge for the Search Committee and then go into a closed session to organize themselves (i.e., elect from themselves the official positions). Anne Hallmark will meet with Vestry and Search Committee Jan 13th to help plan the parish profile and self-study.

Clancy reports we are at 91.97% of our expenses for this year. Pledges are down, though. David wonders if we should discuss this at the annual meeting, Tom wonders if we should mention this next week during the announcements. Nancy asks if we have been following up on un-received capital campaign pledges. Clancy answers that there was $2,000 from people who left the parish and were not going to give the outstanding amount, and $15,000 that we are unsure of. Clancy also reports that we are giving about $2,400 a month to the mortgage.

Vestry proposes that we use some money from the Holiday Basket Fund to buy gift cards to Meijer or Aldi for Travis Courier (our painter). Tom suggests we use up to $400 ($200 for Travis, $200 for an additional family) could be used for this purpose. Vestry expresses assent.

Clancy also reports that for the first time ever, we have covered Choral Scholars without asking for additional money.

Diane reports that she will soon get her travel reports in for reimbursement.

Tom recommends we have two vestry meetings in January, one to deal with budget and the other for the Search Committee. David presents the third Sunday in January ( the 20th) for budget meeting and approval. Vestry expresses assent.

David brings our attention to upcoming events, like the Lessons and Carols this afternoon. Tom moves Vestry adjourns, Nancy seconds. Vestry adjourns.

Faithfully submitted,
Adam Baker

ANGLICAN WORTHIES

338.. Arnold, Matthew (1822-1888)
Poet & Essayist (pt. ii)

After the year lecturing at Oriel, Arnold accepted a position as private secretary to Lord Lansdowne, whose was chair of the Privy Council. Terrific connection but poor pay. As I said before, Arnold was undoubtedly writing poetry, an activity for which he had a genuine calling, as we shall see. Four years later he will be married and employed in a completely different activity. In between, however, were years of considerable stress and confusion about his future and the full use of his gifts. From the start Arnold believed that he had a gift for poetry but at the same time he had doubts—about its strength. Trilling suggests that Arnold “knew he had the right powers to make poetry by that he lacked something in assertiveness.” The loss of his father, ten years before, may have left him directionless.

In the second volume of his poems, published in 1853, are two addressed to a woman named Marguerite and other pieces that deal with Arnold's supposed relationship with her. As she has not been definitely identified, the family asserted that “Marguerite” was a fiction, as one would expect them to. Most commentators, however, believe that “Marguerite” was a very real person who lived on Lake Geneva, and that Arnold, a visitor, had become deeply in love with her, although the degree of involvement cannot be fully explained by the lines concerning her. My sense is that Arnold visited her more than once, but that he pulled back from deeper commitment for two reasons. One was moral. In “Meeting,” he writes, “Again I spring to make my choice. . . . I hear a God's tremendous voice: ‘Be counseled, and retire.’” The other was what he discerned in her temperament. In “A Farewell,” a very moving poem, he says that her heart, “I know, to be long loved and never framed.” He observed in this visit that her feelings toward him were no longer as strong as his still were—as his would continue for some time after the formal parting. He continued to dream of her. “Upon time's barren, stormy flow, Stay with me, Marguerite still!”

This episode was only a part of what can detect is a crisis of purpose during these years, which can be seen in his correspondence with *Clough but certainly can be discerned in the poems published in 1853. Moreover, Arnold was troubled by events of 1848 and beyond. Besides the Geneva affair, he was disturbed by the revolution in Paris, and by the urban unrest in the Chartist rallies, which he visited; he was reading Carlyle. But he was also disturbed by what Clough was doing with his poetry. He was confiding much with Clough, but backing away from him as well.

In 1849 Arnold published The Strayed Reveller and Other Poems, his first volume. The reviews were not enthusiastic, and the reader is not impressed. The title poem, given a quasi-Romantic and mythological setting, is about initiating a young man into the craft of poetry—perhaps Arnold himself. “In Harmony with Nature” rebukes an unnamed clergyman for declaring that the human species lives in harmony with the outside world.

Nature is cruel; man is sick of blood;
Nature is stubborn; man would fain adore.

Man must begin; know this, where Nature ends
Nature and man can never be fast friends.

Such sentiments sound Darwinian, but Origin of the Species would not appear for another ten years. Arnold tries his hand with sonnets, several to Clough, but with the exception of the one about Shakespeare ("Others abide our question. Thou art free"), they are awkwardly phrased and unpleasing, like "Who prop, ask'st, in these bad days, my mind?—" One long poem, "The Forsaken Merman," proved to be a great favorite among his readers. It is a retelling of a Danish folk story, in which a merman, not a mermaid, tries to draw his half-human children into the sea with him. The poem has that melancholy tone we have seen with *Tennyson, and Arnold was to employ more in his next volume. There is no such thing as a happy Arnold poem. Even his family were puzzled.

Arnold was not so haunted with the memory of Marguerite as to be incapable of another affective interest. In 1851 he married Frances Lucy Wightman ("Flu"), daughter of an eminent judge. Lord Lansdown secured him a position as an examiner of schools under the newly established Education Department. It is difficult to imagine, short of manual labor, a position less suitable to Arnold's mind, his sensibility, and his level of education; he seems extremely overqualified. But he was married now; he had to have work.

This involved constant travel, suburbs of London or longer trips by train, to visit elementary schools run by parishes, to view their curricula and supervise their examinations. This was on behalf of the government at a time when education at any level had not been made mandatory. In the words of Carol Christ, Arnold visited the homes of children of "ardently Protestant middle classes," the very people he would eventually write about in Culture and Anarchy [1867] and other essays. Unlike most Victorian writers, including the redoubtable Thomas Carlyle, Matthew Arnold got to know how many people, with ordinary and wearying jobs, lived. He met many clergy who taught and spiritually ministered to these people. His job was monotonous and loaded with paper work, grading exams in reading, writing, and arithmetic. Twelve years of this! Trilling tells us, "The fastidious Arnold became the most dutiful of men; he discharged his responsibilities with consummate earnestness and skill." David Edwards adds, "The wonder is that Arnold did it so competently, with so few complaints." ("A family man, he would make wry jokes about going to work on suburban trains.")

Charlotte *Bronte met him about this time. She was not sure what to make of him. "Striking and prepossessing in appearance, his manner displeases from its seeming foppery. I owe it caused me at first to regard him with regretful surprise. . . . I was told, however, that Mr. Arnold improved upon acquaintance." So it was, Winifred Gérin tells us, "Ere long a real modesty appeared under his assumed conceit, and some genuine intellectual aspiration, as well as high intellectual acquirements, displaced superficial affectation."

The next volume of poems appeared three years later. The difference between the work of 1852 and the preceding book is positively amazing.
